The New York Post said the poster was linked to a website that showed images of nude female athletes, and it pointed to the poster's lead actress as saying it was her work. It didn't disclose the poster's source or say whether the poster's author was male or female. Lately, however, the internet-inspired phenomenon dubbed "snuff film," pornography and murder appears to have taken new turns. According to several media reports, including the Post, Canada's star actress, Carina Lau Ka Ling, has claimed she was kidnapped, raped and tortured in her home on July 3 -- but "not by a stranger." Ka Ling allegedly was bound with duct tape and raped repeatedly while being forced to perform "humiliating acts" at her apartment in Hong Kong. The actress who plays Tara Strong, Stormy Daniels, in the "Kim Possible" sitcom may have a part in the suspected murder or kidnapping of a fan she claims was harassing her and her family online. A link to a Canadian website -- "Movie Stars Need Help" -- was found on her "MySpace" page, according to police in Hong Kong who detained her mother on charges of harboring a fugitive. After the website was linked to an Internet porn site, the poster that was the centerpiece of the Canadian media's report and warning was pulled down. It hasn't been seen since. It's not the first time porn stars have run into such a problem online. But the last incident ended with a high-profile murder, as entertainment news was just taking off.

That means that far too many are barely "average." This is the first time the United States has failed to be rated "top tier" in the best-school rankings since the U.S. News started its survey in the 1970s. You know what happened last time the U.S. News failed to rate America's law schools "top tier"? The American Bar Association protested.
