You are hanging with friends and talking while walking through the park. You see someone you know and smile and walk on. You have a great life and she is the reason of this happy feeling. When you later go home, you notice that your girlfriend has become a little bit fat. She also doesn't look so happy. You don't know what you can do. That's life. Welcome to life! Sorry for my bad english! This is my first attempt in video editing. I was a bit stressed out but I hope its still worth seeing! And YES, the switch from Windows to Linux is worth it! A song made during my time at college and quite liked. It also got played live a few times but sadly no recordings exist. It's a short, upbeat and poppy pop song. But make no mistake - It's a solid, well written song. And a Canadian-made one too, so I'm proud of that. :) I recorded my vocals, produced the track, arranged the instruments and did the solo. I hope you like it. Thanks for listening. In Russian "Samogon" means "hail fellow drink" and translates to "nail fellow". Some think this expression is a tribute to the unity of workers in the Soviet era. However, this might be an improbable explanation. Another theory is that the expression originates in the history of Ukraine and is a translation of a name of an old Ukrainian collective farm. But both explanations just might be a result of coincidence. Read more: Beautiful song. It's one of those songs you can listen to by itself without anything else. Or you can play it with one string of notes, multiple notes or chords and it fits perfectly in with the chords. This song is pretty easy to play and easy to sing as well. The song is great with a good drummer or 2, I played this song in a band and I can play it with some chords I was playing in other songs. I would say the song is on the lighter end of pop/rock music. This song has a pretty catchy hook and a good ring to it. It just has a great deal of nostalgia in it for me. This song is so catchy i cant stop playing it. I'm going to read the lyrics again after listening to it a few times.. I dont

Q: Template c++ class hierarchies I'm starting to learn about design patterns and I'm currently reading Head First Design Patterns. I'm a bit confused with template class hierarchies. Why are the classes defined in the CPP file needed? Can't I just use template class Foo { } or template class Foo { }; Which would define one class per instantiation of the template? A: I think you are confused about the two different uses of the "template" keyword. There are two contexts for the word. It's used for when the scope of the declaration is dependent on the template type parameter, or when it is a template type that is a member of a template class, or when it is a template type inside a template specialization. In all cases, the scoping applies to the types to be declared, not instantiations of that type. In other words, the type you declare is not instantiated; it exists for the lifetime of the template. The type itself is not a template; it's a type that is a template. Template specialization template class Foo; // The actual type is Foo template class Foo { /*... */ }; // Note the difference This is roughly equivalent to the statement template class Foo { ... }; template class Foo { /*... */ }; This one provides a specialization for the Foo template. It can be useful to reduce the
