“The world of Elden Ring is a huge one, filled with many secrets waiting to be discovered. It's filled with a great story, you'll find many different dungeons and other locations for you to explore. Elden Ring makes you feel a sense of being in a fantasy story. Because of that, it's quite refreshing to play.” “It's probably the best fantasy RPG on iOS. I've read other reviewers say similar things, and that's because most of what's great about Elden Ring is what they're used to in other games.” “Despite the game's struggles, the fantasy adventure part of Elden Ring makes for an excellent title when you're looking for a more traditional experience.” “I played this game for ages. I like that there are two very large worlds to explore. I like all the characters that you can meet. I liked that there were a lot of items and recipes to be gained. I liked the ability to refine and upgrade my equipment. It had fun battles with monster attacks. I also liked the story that it has a lot of action to it that you have to do things like find/craft gear, or investigate mysterious places, etc.” © 2016 Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Corporation © 2016 Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Corporation All Rights Reserved. Q: How to change session timeout in ASP.NET Core to increase the duration of the current authenticated user?
I'm trying to understand how to change the session timeout in ASP.NET Core. I am working with a very simple form web page that uses a code-behind class (index.cshtml). I am authenticating the user by checking the user's domain name. I want to set a session timeout in my application for a given authenticated user. Something similar to what is achieved with a 'remember me' checkbox in web forms, where the box is set as active by default, and the duration is the session duration. When the user closes the browser, the user will have an authenticated user session for the duration of the form page session (10 or 15 minutes). When the user returns to the form page, the page may be reloading after a timeout, but the user has an authenticated user session (10 or 15 minutes). Is there any way to achieve this in ASP.NET Core? A: You can modify the timeout for a session by calling the ConfigureSession extension method in the ConfigureServices method of the Startup class.

services.ConfigureSession(options => { options.IdleTimeout = TimeSpan.FromMinutes(10); });

Here's a similar question asked on the ASP.NET website: ASP.NET Core Session Timeout

Q: USB to RS232/RS422 Converter with Raspberry Pi I am looking for a project to do with the Raspberry Pi (any model) and needing a USB to RS232/RS422 Converter. I am hoping to use the Pi for a temperature/humidity monitor and just need something that allows me to plug in the USB head and send data to a computer at a known time/time interval. My question is does anyone know a USB/RS232 converter that is compatible with a Raspberry Pi? A: You can do this pretty easily with the gpiozero library

First, you define the pin that you want to be the input on your Pi and the pin that you want to be the output
import RPi.GPIO as GPIO import time
pi_pin = 13
bios_pin = 7
GPIO.setmode(GPIO.BCM)
GPIO.setup(pi
```
