Q: What exactly is a callback in Node.js? In the node.js documentation, there is this example, `event.addListener('click', function(e) { console.log('click'); console.log(this); console.log(arguments); });` What I don't understand is what exactly is a callback and what is its purpose? I think it's something to do with asynchronous programming but couldn't understand exactly. A: The syntax you're showing has a function callback. You can also specify a named function that is called instead of a function callback. A callback is like any other function - it takes arguments and returns values. When an event occurs in some element, the event handler is called. Some built-in events are: click keyup mousedown change However, rather than using the built-in event handlers, you can create a function that has code that runs when an event occurs. Your handler looks just like any other function, with the exception of the callback parameter, which is the name of a function that will be called after the event handler finishes executing: `function clickHandler(e) {`

    console.log("clicked"); }
document.getElementById("foo").addEventListener("click",clickHandler,true);

See the official documentation for details. The first argument of `addEventListener()` is a string which identifies an event on the element. The second argument is a function that will be called when the event occurs. So in the above example, when a person clicks on the foo element, the event handler function `clickHandler` will be called. In the call to `addEventListener()` the third argument is set to `true`, meaning that the event handler is called asynchronously (the `true` argument is the third argument to the `addEventListener()` function). This means that the call to `clickHandler()` happens later and the function will be called when the function is finished executing. The fourth argument is a boolean. The value can be `true` or `false`. In the example
