What's new:

: 5 November 2017 LND and Marianne have participated in the LND-Boston 2016, and want to remember these experiences on their website. We are contributing to this as an update on this process. In 2016, we started a review of the whole system: To prepare the content we used XMPP. XMPP was the proprietary communication protocol of Jabber based on Apache-2.0 licensed open software. Jabber protocol was designed for IoT to enable low power, decentralized, and large scale communication. It is also designed to support efficient text communications with plain text attached to the request/response messages. The Jabber protocol supports registration, login, presence, message exchange, and status changes. Many already know about the XMPP protocol. But some do not and want to know more. We did the following preparation by using only XMPP. Therefore, the word XMPP can be written and heard at every context. The preparation method was logically simple: We used XMPP and received a preshared key from WeChat, and used it to login to WeChat. Next, we used XMPP to login to that WeChat account. We logged in to WeChat and looked at the “Images” and “Location” options on the “Tips” section of WeChat. Finally, we looked at the “Fine Arts” section of WeChat. We chose this, because we were interested in the Japanese art section, and we found the “Tsumihana” option on it. Here is an image showing the “Tsumihana” option on an iPhone. (Image from WeChat) We selected the “Tsumihana” option for “WeChat Tips” in this page. We viewed the “Tsumihana” artworks as the “Sample Artworks” page in WeChat. The
