* www.photoshopforbeginners.com * www.tutsplus.com The various brush tool (Eraser, Round, Pencil, Type, Paint Bucket) and fill tool (Paint Bucket, Color Correction, Gradient, Fill) allow quick and intuitive photo editing. Photoshop also includes dozens of special effects such as Gradient Fill, Blend Modes, Dodge and Burn, Color Correction, Noise Reduction, Transparent Color, and Magic Wipes. Even if Photoshop is not used for retouching photos, beginners can create an array of unique effects that can easily be used as a substitute. # Introduction to Photoshop on the iPhone There are several good Photoshop programs for the iPhone: * Filter Pro Photo ($1.99) * Pixelmator Pro ($19.99) * Photoshop Express ($4.99) * Photoshop Elements ($6.99) Once you're comfortable using an image-editing program for the iPhone, you can use any of these apps. There are also many tutorials available online that you can use to learn how to use a variety of tools. The following sections describe each of these apps. ## Filter Pro Photo Filter Pro Photo ($1.99) is a great app for beginners to learn how to use Photoshop. Its main interface has a photo-editing toolbar with a variety of tools, including the brush tool (Eraser, Round, Pencil, and Paint Bucket) and fill tool (Paint Bucket, Color Correction, Gradient, Fill). When you first open the app, a Photo Mode is displayed at the bottom of the screen. The Photo Mode shows the original photo and a clipping mask, which shows the size of the original photo you are editing (Figure 8-4). Figure 8-4. Filter Pro Photo's Photo Mode shows the original photo and a white mask on the bottom half of the screen, letting you see the size of the original photo. The app also shows a number of tools that you can use to create effects. For example, Figure 8-5 shows the effects you can create using the Round and Paint Bucket tools. Figure 8-5. Filter Pro Photo includes a variety of tools for creating effects. ## Pixelmator Pro Pixelmator Pro ($19.99) is a great app for beginner users to learn how to use Photoshop. You can edit

Q: TypeError: 'int' object is not callable when updating firebase data I am attempting to update data in a firebase database using a node.js server. The data being updated is a number of strings from a Firebase real-time database, all of which are integers. The data updates fine as it does not throw any errors, however, the following error is thrown when calling my method update by calling the firebase database, node js server, and api:

TypeError: 'int' object is not callable Here is my code for the method: exports.update = function(req, res) { Firebase.update(req.body.id, 'players', {'cell':req.body.cell}, function(err, data) { if(err) { console.log(err); res.json({success: false, message: err}) } else { console.log(data); res.json({success: true, message: "success", data: data}) } }) } Here is the output on my api call: { message:'success', data: { score: '1', server: '1', time: '14', cell: '2' } } The issue seems to arise when I pass in req.body.cell. Although cell is an integer, this passes just fine to the method. A: It's an issue with the way Firebase handles promises. In your callback (after update has completed), the data is just a single integer at that point, and nothing is telling it that you want to write a separate line, so you're just calling res.send with that integer. Instead, you need to nest it into the returned object. exports.update = function(req, res) { Firebase.update(req.body.id, 'players', {

Efficacy of cefepime in the treatment of deep-seated urinary tract infection. Deep-seated urinary tract infection (UTI) is challenging to treat because of the poor tissue penetration and penetration-enhancing properties of many commonly used antimicrobial agents. We evaluated the efficacy of cefepime (Zinacef) in the treatment of deep-seated UTI in children. The study was performed in two phases: a 2-phase, open-label, non-comparative pilot study (phase I) and a 3-phase, open-label, comparative, multicentre trial (phase II). The goal of phase I was to determine the efficacy of cefepime in deep-seated UTI in children, defined as renal lesions extending to the bladder wall. The goal of phase II was to compare the efficacy and safety of cefepime with those of ceftriaxone (Rocephin), based on clinical and microbiological outcomes, including drug-related adverse events (AEs). The primary endpoint was clinical cure at test of cure. In phase II, the data from phase I were used to analyse drug-related AEs. A total of 106 patients received cefepime monotherapy in phase I and 56 patients received cefepime with or without prior therapy in phase II. All strains were identified to the species level by the reference method. In phase II, more (85.4 vs. 77.2%) patients were clinically cured in the cefepime-treated group than in the ceftriaxone-treated group at test of cure ($P=0.03$), and the differences were clinically significant. However, at test of cure, 67.7 vs. 77.8% of patients had an eradication of micro-organisms in the cefepime- and ceftriaxone-treated groups, respectively. Incidences of drug-related AEs and serious drug-related AEs were similar between the two treatment groups. In children with deep-seated UTI, there were no differences in efficacy and safety between cefepime and ceftriaxone. These results suggest that cefepime could be a useful alternative treatment option for deep-seated UTI in children. UNPUBLISHED
