Contribute to the Creator The development of this title started when the creator himself, Tommy Tang, encountered a heavy dose of self-doubt during the end of the most recent semester at Cal Poly Pomona. After a major incident of unfortunate events, Tommy was about to be kicked out of college and thrown out of the academy without a degree and without a job. Despite being depressed, he still decided to continue his dream and developed an application to teach the world that self-doubt is to be seen as a constant mistake rather than a self-perpetuating barrier. Ceaser" after his death. Genius identity "Theodore Matthew Flickerman" — a.k.a. "Johnny Seven" — met frequently with L'Orange and Groucho during the 1930s. From a letter written by Bert Green with the assistance of Mary Cole and Berenice Whiteman, entitled "To Leonard Bloom and Louis Levin: How I Became 'Genius' Flickerman": It was at the time of the murder that I became "Genius" Flickerman. And ever since then, I've been trying, as you can see from the title of my book, "The "Or-ange Theory of Genius" — A Journey — in search of my identity. The earliest sources refer to the name of my alleged creators as "Lou, Leo and Bert." That is still the common way that I am described in the entertainment press. But in truth, I made my first successful attempts at inventing back in 1930 at 727 Benefit Street, Room 176, in Hartford, Connecticut. Here I created the three appearances of "Johnny Seven," my first famous character. At that time I was called (by the people who witnessed those three productions) Bert Green. That is also the name on my birth certificate that I got from the Hartford city records about seven years ago. Shortly after that, I made my first appearance as "Johnny Seven" on the stage at Barnaby's Dramatic Academy in Newark, New Jersey, in August 1932. That was the only stage appearance made by "Johnny Seven" as a "genius" and was intended to be the debut of "Genius" Flickerman — my first public character. I had saved money and become head writer at Barnaby's by that time and assumed the real name of Bert Green, but also decided that "Genius" Flickerman was a better name for my creations. I changed my appearance (wigs, make-up, beard, etc.) in order to better appear as a character in comics and Hollywood films. It was around this time I began creating the original drawings that became the first genuine one-shots published by Allen Harvey's Toy Mart. At that time I wanted to make a couple of good films to keep my Hollywood contacts interested. But with the Depression and the lack of film capital, I gave up all thoughts of making a picture. I did, however, begin a series of scripts and character designs
