Defined release of catecholamines from bovine adrenal chromaffin cells in culture. Chromaffin cells were prepared from bovine adrenal gland and incubated under serum-free conditions in vitro. The release of catecholamines (CA) was measured by a spectrofluorimetric assay using a monoclonal antibody to CA. A single cell suspension was incubated in the presence of serum-free defined medium. The addition of 250 mM KCl resulted in a rapidly increase in the release of CA over a 30 min period, as measured by peak concentrations of 780 +/- 40 nM (P less than 0.01). The addition of 1 mM ouabain increased the release of CA by almost a factor of 3 over that observed in the control incubations. The effect of ouabain was not reversed by the subsequent addition of 6 mM KCl, indicating that it is not a consequence of an increase in the release of CA. Bilateral noradrenaline depletion of cultured chromaffin cells by prolonged depolarization or by continuous exposure to desmethylimipramine resulted in a fall in the release of CA from these cells. However, the release of CA from cultured chromaffin cells could be augmented by adding CaCl2 or forskolin to the serum-free defined medium.Q: How to build a gradient stroke in Illustrator? I have created a gradient fill for a font in Illustrator and want to create a gradient stroke of the same thing. Do I need to create a new stroke and go into gradient settings or can I just copy the stroke from a different layer into a new stroke? A: Select the Layer you want your stroke to be on, and click "Shapes" Choose "Path" - "Add Anchor Points" Adjust the position of the anchor point (the spot where the gradient stops. Make the anchor point just a little way off the center. Adjust the size, so that it fits the part of the font you want to fill, and click OK. Apply the stroke. Hope this helps someone. Q: What class of maths is good for programming? I took a few different maths classes. I'm now taking a robotics class where we had to program a robot in a mathematics class. This was all very challenging, but I started to think that all of my other math
