Linked Data in the Americas Linked Data in the Americas aims at facilitating the discovery, reuse, and integration of datasets pertaining to the ever-growing abundance of data that is acquired in the Americas. It is the vision of the Americas Documentation Initiative to make the data that public institutions collect, generate, and share publicly available in a persistent and automated manner. As a result, linking data to a unified context across disciplines, all makes accessing, reusing, and analyzing information easier for a wider audience in the Americas. Additionally, Linked Data in the Americas improves the quality of descriptive metadata by providing it in a way that is open, interoperable, and more likely to be widely adopted. What is Linked Data in the Americas? Linked Data in the Americas is the collaborative work of public institutions in the Americas to develop consistent practices and standards for representing, sharing, accessing, and contextualizing data. Linked Data in the Americas is not an infrastructure or technology project; it seeks to put the process of sharing and publishing linked data online to facilitate access to data. It aims at identifying, creating, and reusing datasets to provide a web

A third of Bulgaria's 11.5 million citizens are over 60 — they're 'the very heart of the country,' says Parliament. Burgas, Bulgaria - A little bit of Bulgaria, known for its traditional art and architecture and where the poorest neighbourhood in Europe lives, is being transformed into a country showpiece. Years of work are now being done to bring the city centre back to life as the government celebrates the grand opening of a year-long pavilion of the city - the capital for Bulgaria's ancient Slavic culture. Entitled "Across the Years: The Evlogyani Monastery," the pavilion is part of an urban development programme worth $1 billion. The scale of Bulgaria's development comes as Europe's poorest country faces a wave of populism that has swept through a string of Eastern Europe countries, threatening the post-communist transition that began in 1989. The national pavilion, which opened in July, comprises a collection of historic buildings and institutions from around the country. Architecturally, it is a triumph of 19th-century Slavic style, with a circular main building, a swimming pool and a grandiose building that resembles a Greek temple. Outside,
