Back in the 1950s, the ORTF was a governing body of the music industry and, in the wake of the radio revolution, they decided to create a model of a radio station for the future. In order to do this, they created several fictitious radio stations, calling them 'Pop Shows.' The idea was, the stations would resemble, as closely as possible, the various radio services of the day. The Pop Shows were different from today's contemporary Pop Radio stations. They had their own format and some were quite eccentric. Pop Show #27, also called Music Force 1, was hosted by an unnamed female DJ, and her voice was dubbed with a western actor. The voice sounded like Cliff Rossiter from the television show, 'The Lone Ranger.' It's hard to imagine that the ORTF paid for this imitation of a western (or a Cliff Rossiter impersonation!) but apparently they did. Other Pop Shows also used crude language, used 'Shock Rhetorics' and spent a lot of time attempting to shock and scare listeners. There was, of course, no such thing as sexy talk back then, but the 'shock' came in the dramatic use of fake screams, noises and pounding music. These days, Radiogirl 104.7 could be considered a Pop Show! Both the ORTF and Radiogirl are part 0cc13bf012

I don't know how to reset it or whatever. I did $sudo dpkg-reconfigure xserver-org. The menu finally came up and I clicked on Default Display, but it immediately went back to the same thing I was before I clicked on Default Display. Oh and I also had a error in the log file. A: Type this command sudo service gdm restart Cytochrome c oxidase assembly. Cytochrome c oxidase (CcO) is a heme-containing enzyme catalyzing the chemiosmotic proton pumping from the intermembrane space of the mitochondria to the aqueous solution in the inner mitochondrial membrane. Its assembly is a quite complicated and not completely understood process. In vitro reconstitution experiments show that the cytochrome c oxidase assembly is a highly sensitive process involving a series of protein-protein interactions. The assembly, as observed in the in vitro reconstitution, is initiated by the formation of a heme a/Cu(B) copper center, the most likely intermediate species which has so far eluded any molecular characterization. This heme a/Cu(B) center is found in the intermembrane space and is proposed to
