Every time a user visits my site, this works on the initial call to getCurrentPosition(). However, if the user returns to the site in a few days, the first call to getCurrentPosition() works and the function reports the user's location correctly. But if the user returns to the site in a few days after that, the first call to getCurrentPosition() reports the user's location incorrectly. And so on. How can I track how long it has been since the user last visited the site so that I can handle that? A: I have just found the same problem, navigator.geolocation.getCurrentPosition(function() { if (initial_position_is
