Features Key:

New Imperial Districts for 8 new regions, and 4 new barbarian tribes
More than 50 civilizations to choose from in a procedurally-generated world
Achieves a base civilization level of 10000 within ten generations
Friendly and hostile depictions of tech, civics, and religions

Emperor Content Pack Technical Review:

This content pack was made with the intention of having fun and spicing up the game. There's three new imperial districts with 50 new civs with new traits and civics. New Regions:

Janggut: A dried out, ecologically devastated, mostly desert terrain. This region is usually pitted against the unpeaceful Andakhalim in a fight for supremacy.

Kingdom: A lush mountainous region where the king's nobility are rich and powerful. Because of that, they're a relatively peaceful region to work with. They can also be up close and personal to the king if someone wants to usurp the throne.

Vikings: A temperamental region, Vikings are always looking for new lands. They're either peaceful or aggressive depending on where they are.

Tualatins: This region is a close cousin to the Buddhists. Tualatins are often brought into contact with the Baekun empire, but they have to be careful about the ways that they spread their religion, as they're not at liberty to spread it as much as the King would like them to.

New Civs:

Zabudian: The Zabudian nation typically is a merchant empire that lives off the trade of their people. They have a balance between producing and trading and, because of their trust and position, they aren't often the ones doing the fighting. They often hire out military exped
