I am using Entity Framework with an existing database. I have a one-to-many relationship setup between two tables, let's call them MyTable and MyTable2. MyTable2 is a reverse relation to MyTable (there is no primary key on MyTable2 to match MyTable's primary key, but there is a backlink). The relationship from MyTable to MyTable2 seems to work fine, but when I set up a query on MyTable I get "select has no destination for the return values" error. So I set up the query using a join, like so: var MyTableQuery = context.MyTable .Where(e => e.MyKey == "1234"); I get an error "The ObjectContext instance has been disposed and can no longer be used for operations that involve database communication." I thought maybe I'm setting up the query the wrong way, so I tried looking up some examples of Entity Framework with one-to-many relationships but they all seem to call for primary keys on both tables. Is there a standard way of dealing with a scenario like this? If it matters I'm using C#,.NET 4.0, and I'm using Entity Framework 4.0. Update Here is the query in LINQPad: var MyTableQuery = context.MyTable.Where(e => e.MyKey == "1234"); var Result = MyTableQuery.Select("myTable2"); A: Change your query to: var MyTableQuery = context.MyTable.Where(e e79caf774b)
