A: You really can't. It's like if someone asked you to implement a magic ability into your programming language, and then you could claim that the language is Turing-complete. The problem is, the language is Turing-complete because it is Turing-complete, not the other way round. Q: Returning a list of a struct object in the to_json function How can I write a mystruct in the main function and then return it in the to_json(mystruct)? type mystruct = struct [`First`] [`Second`] [`Third`] end let f1 = {First = "foo"; Second = "bar"; Third = "blah"} let to_json f1 = let json_str = sprintf "%s" f1.to_json in json_str I tried this, but it doesn't work: let json f1 = let json_str = sprintf "%s" f1.to_json in json_str A: to_json can only be used for primitive values. You can see it here under Inputs: To convert a value into a json, you can use the Json.serialize function which does that. For example, to_json returns a json representation, while Json.serialize returns a text representation. It's not a good idea to return an object from another function. The function should return the object and return the json as an argument. let to_json f1 = Json.serialize f1 Result: { "First": "foo", "Second": "bar", "Third": "blah" } BTW, this will work: let to_json _ = sprintf "%s" f1.to_json But you should use record syntax, like this: let to_json { |First| Second| Third| } = sprintf "%s" f1.to_json You can also skip to_json if you like, but I guess it will look pretty weird: let sprintf

It operates grades 7-12. It is located on Dundas Street just west of the Memorial Collegiate Institute. A history professor at the University of Western Ontario said in a 2004 feature in The Western Wheel, that the school "employs a method of teaching in the classroom that has yet to be attempted in Ontario." Notable alumni Robert Louis Stevenson attended from 1910 to 1911. Does anyone know how I can do it? Is it even possible? A: S3 is an object-oriented key/value store; that is, the objects are identified by a key, and they store information as key/value pairs. So when you download a file, you read the file and then give the file a name (a key), and then you can retrieve the S3 object

CRACK RAR PLAZA.A new use of "tangible personal property" has been created in Canada, in response to a loophole that allows the government to tax some self-employed Canadians on the income they earn as consultants. The Trudeau government is hoping the courts will approve its proposal to re-characterize income earned in self-employment as "tangible personal property," which it says would shift the income away from the GST but keep it in the tax net. The change is being made to bring self-employed freelancers into compliance with the federal Goods and Services Tax (GST), which they have been taxed on only since 2008. Without the new ruling, many self-employed Canadians could use their consulting work as a tax-free cash cow, and consultants would have to pay both the provincial sales tax and the GST. "When you're self-employed, you have no obligation to file your tax returns," said Jason Schofield, a Toronto-based accountant who specializes in self-employment. "This is a means of attempting to bring to the surface those individuals who choose to work without being registered [with the federal tax agency]. Those individuals will have no choice but to comply with the GST." Schofield, who believes the government is using this GST loophole to extend its reach over the self-employed, said it is obvious the increase was not put into place to benefit low-income earners. He said there is an obvious lack of transparency and the government is trying to avoid paying its fair share of taxes. "For the sake of trying to tax all sorts of people in the country the government is doing [this] trick of reclassifying," said Schofield. "It is there to be able to tax everyone else." When GST was first introduced in 2008, its creators had the expectation it would capture many low-income earners as well as the small business owners who paid the then-GST to the provinces. In 2010, then finance minister Jim Flaherty suggested the tax code could be reworked to make the GST revenue more equitable, bringing in more money from large corporations than from "small businesses or sole proprietors." Schofield says one way to address the loophole is to get rid of the small business exemption, which is currently set at $28,000 per person, which is the limit for earned income
