The main focus will be the use of retroviral vectors for gene transfer into hematopoietic progenitor cells to achieve permanent expression of therapeutic genes in patients with inherited disorders of hematopoietic cell function. We will be working closely with the Cystic Fibrosis Gene Therapy Consortium led by Dr. Carol Bell, who has already established their comprehensive gene therapy efforts for patients with cystic fibrosis, because of their expertly coordinated program management and evaluation efforts. BCM is ideally suited for a program of this type due to its high level of research, technology, and clinical support to patients. Additional support for the establishment of a BCM Cancer Center Gene Therapy Program can be expected from the Center in the form of skilled personnel, specialized facilities, and support for research and patient care. The main impact of this grant will be the development of clinical trials and the training of new investigators to pursue translation of gene therapy from bench to bedside. The BCM Cancer Center Gene Therapy Program will

But she had an added bonus: she could sniff out stolen objects and reward owners with big jumps, lip licks, wagging tail, and endless purrs. One day in August, she bolted outside and disappeared. Hours later, a neighbor returned from the lake. She had found Lilly's body, shot in the chest and throat, still harnessed to her swim ring. The tag on the collar read: "For God and Country." Authorities never found the culprit. Lilly's legacy lives on in the Lilly the Wonder Dog Memorial Fund. Photo: Courtesy of Orvin Peterson Tribute to a Wonder Dog 2007 COLUMBIA, MO His name? Louie. Or at least that's what he called himself. Louie was a friendly, lovable gal who seemed to enjoy everyone she met. She liked everyone, except her owners.
