Vray Studio Standalone Pro 20, Config.I'm a senior visiting Fulbright scholar in Japan this summer and I've been invited to attend a meetup on learning how to reverse-engineer parts of the PS4 in order to have a "look inside." Seeing as how I love hacking things and learning about the inner workings of the hardware, this sounds like a pretty rad thing to do. The meetup is slated for July 4th, which I'm taking as a sign that it will probably be at an actual hackerspace in the city, in a pizza parlor and drinking beer. It was kind of a struggle to find a place that fits into the "hackerspace" niche in Japan. I ended up going to a place called Genus (I think that's what it's called), which is a sex toy shop turned hackerspace. It's a kind of "social hackerspace," not what the term usually means, but it's probably closer to that than the other places I've found. Anyway, I'm excited about this event, and I'm looking forward to finding out more about reverse engineering and what exactly Sony is trying to hide.Q: How to change order of outputted data from a for loop in Python? Code: code1 = ['r', 't', 'j'] code2 = ['e', 'o', 'l'] code3 = ['l', 'r', 't'] code4 = ['o', 'e', 'j'] for x in [code1, code2, code3, code4]: for y in [code1, code2, code3, code4]: print(f"{x}{y}") print("") It works as I intended, but I can't seem to figure out how to change the order the outputted data is in. I want it to read: eoljrlter jeolrt treo orelr So I can't just do: code1 = ['r', 't', 'j'] code2 = ['e', 'o', 'l'] code3 = ['l', 'r', 't']
