the third option is to use visual studio as an ide. you can select all the controls on the page, right-click on them, and you get a variety of options, some of which include generate code, add to code behind, generate events, add to event handler, show in designer, etc. the default is "generate code". you can then drag-and-drop controls into the designer, and fill in the properties as needed. the fourth option is to use an outside tool. there are some good ones out there. i've not used them, so i can't comment. there are also a number of commercial products out there. the best i can say is that i don't know of any that give as much power and functionality. i used two different tools to generate the code for the project i referenced above. the first was microsoft's code generator. i could use the.net 4.0 designer to place controls on the surface, and this would generate the code behind in the same document. you can then use the codesmith tool (free version) to generate the code. i have not used codesmith yet, but i like what i see. there are a few different things that make iron speed designer an excellent product. first is the price. it's $20.00, and it doesn't come with any software. most software products sell for $1000 and up. even the free ones are typically loaded with bloatware, and they certainly do not come with a product key. the price of iron speed designer is very appealing. it's far less expensive than codesmith, and it doesn't come with the bloatware that comes with codesmith. while i have not found any "free" iron speed designer templates, this is not to say that they do not exist.

The heavy lifting is done for you, and so you can focus on what you love best: your design! The Data Aquarium Framework is an open source project that enables you to develop rich, highly interactive, web-based, cross-platform, apps in the IDE. This completely new approach offers all the benefits of object-orientated programming in a simple, familiar, environment. It allows you to write your own functions, classes, and loops to determine where and how your code is executed. The Iron Speed Designer Wizard guides you through the process and takes care of the rest. It creates a wizard-based DBAL Extension for the data that creates, a User Interface (UI) Builder to assemble your UI, and a Business Logic Builder to create your own objects. You no longer need code generators and additional tools. Let's think about how you might extend the product to create "magical" features. The highlights of Iron Speed Designer include (1) the ability to set any control's property at any time; (2) the ability to add custom code to the application at any time; and (3) the ability to build classic ASP pages. The next step is to add fields to the form. The required fields are provided by default, but you can add any custom fields that will be saved in the form. Iron Speed Developer includes both visual and traditional development options. The visual development tools in Iron Speed Developer will make adding new fields to the form much faster than using Visual Studio. Because this product is dedicated specifically to developers who want to extend forms, several tools are provided for building forms. In addition to saving forms, there are several other features. 5ec8ef588b
