Bean Jun 16, 2006..Cyclosporine A-mediated Bax activation and prosurvival action in human lung epithelial cells: differential roles in senescence. Cyclosporine A (CsA) is the most frequently used immunosuppressive drug for patients undergoing allograft transplantation. CsA causes multistage senescence in human lung epithelial cells in vitro, likely due to its immunosuppressive effect. However, CsA can also have chemopreventive effects in human lung cells. In this study, we investigated the involvement of the mitochondrial apoptosis pathway in CsA-induced senescence. E6E7 human bronchial epithelial cells were treated with CsA for 10 days. Cell viability and cell cycle progression were determined, and protein levels of the mitochondrial Bcl-2-like proteins Bax and Bad were examined by Western blot analysis. This study provides evidence that senescence is initiated by the activation of the Bax and Bad proteins, as well as the activation of the caspase-9, -3 and -8 enzymes, possibly through the mitochondrial pathway of apoptosis. Importantly, it was also found that the expression and activity of the prosurvival proteins, Bcl-2 and Bcl-XL, were decreased in CsA-induced senescent cells, while the proapoptotic protein Bax was increased. These observations suggest that the prosurvival proteins play opposing roles, depending on the level of Bax expression. Here, we show that Bax activation can lead to apoptosis in the presence of CsA; however, in the absence of Bax expression, the prosurvival effect of Bcl-2 and Bcl-XL is maintained.
